The opening was irregular, with gains predominating, but a new bear assault soon carried many stocks down to new low marks for the year. One of these was United States Steel, which dropped to 701-2. The previous low mark for the year was 71. Railroad stocks were under beavy pressure, declining from good sized fractions to more than 2 points and in the oil and industrial groups early losses extended to as much as 4 points. However, it was soon demonstrated that the market is in a heavily oversold condition and that its technical or inside position has been vastly improved. The decline failed to uncover any consequential amount of stop-loss orders and neither did it result in forced selling of large speculative accounts that may have become weakened by the market's recent sharp Jecline.
